Convened under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council
10–14 and 17–19 July 2023

Report of the high-level political forum on sustainable development convened under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council at its 2023 session

Summary

Countries have been severely affected by interlocking crises that have amplified pressing challenges, including those relating to poverty, food insecurity, inflation, debt and energy. As a consequence, they have fallen further behind in achieving the Sustainable Development Goals in the face of these recent challenges. Despite the setbacks, they remain essential and collective efforts therefore need to be strengthened to achieve the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. The 2030 Agenda remains the common road map for sustainable development.

All the Goals are important and are facing challenges. The current situation regarding food security (Goal 2) and access to clean water and sanitation (Goal 6) is particularly critical. For all the Goals, science technology and innovation play a crucial role in overcoming challenges and accelerating progress. Scientific analysis demonstrates that the Goals are still achievable if countries collaborate efficiently.

Climate action, as well as the urgent need to tackle biodiversity loss and environmental degradation, are key priorities. Reducing greenhouse gas emissions and transitioning to renewable energies in a just and equitable manner are of the utmost importance.

The commitment to leave no one behind must be reaffirmed, including through actions that support gender equality and address the challenges faced by children and youth. Multi-stakeholder partnerships and global coordination – including with civil society, the private sector and local governments – are critical in achieving the 2030 Agenda.

Access to financing is a key challenge to achieving sustainable development. Developing countries face significant obstacles due to debt distress, high interest rates and constrained fiscal space, with limited affordable financing options. Many countries are calling for more concessional finance, reforms of the international financial architecture and innovative financing solutions, including debt relief for climate action swaps.

Water and sanitation must be elevated as a top global political priority, recognized as both a global common good and a fundamental right. Increased risks of inaction have a disproportionate impact on the most vulnerable groups worldwide. A paradigm shift in water management and increased, concerted action, including regular stocktaking, are pivotal. There is an increasing urgency to mitigate risks associated with water and sanitation and the development of early warning systems. There is a need for more effective, outcome-based cooperation among countries, stakeholder groups and institutions. Global actions and momentum should continue to follow the success of the United Nations Conference on the Midterm Comprehensive Review of the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Sustainable Development”, 2018–2028, held from 22 to 24 March 2023. The appointment of a United Nations special envoy on water, the adoption of a United Nations system-wide strategy and global dialogues on water held on a regular basis would be strongly welcomed by countries.

There is an urgent need to intensify efforts to ensure universal access to clean and affordable energy and to call for action to deliver on the global road map for accelerated action on Goal 7. Affordable, reliable, sustainable and modern energy underpins the ability to achieve other Goals and net-zero emissions by 2050. Ensuring universal access to clean and affordable electricity must be an urgent political priority. Such action on energy must be aimed at achieving net-zero emissions. Without deep energy decarbonization, achieving net-zero by 2050 will quickly become out of reach. A platform for regular intergovernmental dialogue on energy at the United Nations could contribute significantly to strengthening international cooperation.

Innovation, supported by science and technology, is an engine of growth that drives transformation and allows countries to develop their economies, provide employment and expand the range of products and services. Countries need to adopt policies, strategies and regulations that promote inclusive and just transitions towards green and digital economies and reduce the digital divide. Policymakers should also promote legal frameworks that support responsible and ethical artificial intelligence and prepare their workforces for future driven by AI.

In the light of the accelerating urbanization that is taking place in developing countries, building and rebuilding sustainable cities and communities has a far-reaching impact on the overall achievement of the Goals. Recent crises are having a negative impact the achievement of Goal 11 and pose the risk that, without strengthened action, 2 billion more people will be living in slums in the next 30 years. Improving access to public transportation is critical to connect urban dwellers to economic opportunity. Efforts should be focused locally and centred around inclusion, sustainability and affordable housing.

Owing to the global debt crisis, many countries are allocating an increasingly larger share of fiscal income to debt service at the expense of the Goals and public services. In addition, the ongoing war in Ukraine is shifting public spending priorities to the military and industries that produce fossil fuels. There was a call to establish a legal framework to prevent the sovereign debt crisis, giving priority to debt cancellation and a new approach to debt sustainability. The public sector alone cannot finance climate adaptation and the Goals. Massive private capital mobilization and a fundamental reconsideration of the global financial architecture, including measures against corruption and financial crimes, are needed.
Mobilizing regional action and leveraging regional frameworks can support countries in overcoming crises and moving on to recovery and full implementation of the 2030 Agenda. There is a need to democratize and localize the 2030 Agenda, including through the engagement of young people and intergenerational solidarity, to achieve the Goals while leaving no one behind.

Concrete actions are needed to address the resource mobilization challenges faced by small island developing States. These include reforms of the international financial architecture and the adoption of the multidimensional vulnerability index, which would allow for a comprehensive assessment of their vulnerabilities in decisions on development financing. While middle-income countries were widely acknowledged as central to achieving the Goals at the global level, the diverse challenges and development gaps they face are not captured by income-based indicators.

Least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and many African countries are the most at risk of being left behind. Efforts for recovery need to focus on resilience-building and the structural transformation of their economies. A lack of adequate and affordable financing presents the main impediment to achieving the Goals. There is a need to support the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goal stimulus as called for by the Secretary-General, to the benefit of these countries.

Major groups and other stakeholders call for a more sustainable, genuinely inclusive and human rights-centric approach to development. Partnerships at the national and international levels are crucial in monitoring and reporting on progress in the implementation of the 2030 Agenda. States underscored the critical importance of civil society in helping to create capacities for on-the-ground achievement of the Goals, with many highlighting their ongoing engagement with stakeholder groups.

The 2023 high-level political forum on sustainable development convened under the auspices of the General Assembly (Sustainable Development Goals Summit) provides an important opportunity to augment ambition, political will and broader social coalitions, grounded in robust scientific knowledge, to catalyse and lock in the momentum for change, maximizing the benefits and cushioning the costs of the transformations that are necessary for implementing the 2030 Agenda.
